Building the library from the nest

If we want to nurture a love of reading, it is important that children, from a very young age, have books to touch and choose from.

Building a first library of literature at home is a fundamental practice to awaken and encourage the habit of reading: an experience that undoubtedly brings with it a great emotional and emotional charge.

In this daily habit, books will spread our children's enthusiasm for discovery, help them acquire basic intellectual skills and introduce them to a world of knowledge and fun. Thus is born a bond of love for reading that can last a lifetime.

As in a construction set, this first library should include a variety of elements, where each book has its own value and, at the same time, is a piece that relates to and fits in with the others.

Toddlers can have fun with a wide range of cloth books, bath books and board books with flaps, tabs, textures and mechanisms to play peekaboo. "The Seasons" series, the forthcoming Touch & Feel: Animals or Wow! What a Hole! by Mar Benegas and the latest adventures of Minino by Martí-Salomó are good examples.

Activity books are another important part of a pre-school library bookshelf. Kids can boost their potential in a fun way, challenging their imagination, while also fostering critical skills like problem solving, fine motor skills, and language proficiency. "Creativity at Stake!" by Àngels Navarro, illustrated by Susie Hammer meets all the requirements.

To add an even more playful dimension to reading, pop-ups are essential in the Combel library. In them, the paper engineering interacts with the image and the text to form a book-object built like a sculpture. The little ones will be able to travel to the North Pole with the reporters Pipa & Otto, the series created by Patricia Geis.

One of the pieces that cannot be missing in our library is the imagier, an ideal tool for structuring and consolidating the lexicon and refining reading comprehension. Although the most classic ones are those designed to learn the first words, this typology can cover different age groups. As an example, "I Spy With My Little Eye..." series by Cristina Losantos, created for kids from 3 years onwards, not only fulfills that role but also adds a new dimension with the search & find game and a large dose of humor.

Another virtue of reading is that it helps us to understand the world around us.

Fairy tales are a key element for young listeners and readers, as they are part of a cultural legacy that stands the test of time. The stories are full of fantastic characters, mysterious places and unusual situations, which awaken fantasy, stimulate creativity and activate the ability to imagine different worlds. The "Vintage Classics" series, with texts by Bel Olid and illustrations by Mercè Canals, has a good place on this shelf.

An indispensable pillar in our library is the picture book genre, which naturally provides us with the opportunity to read aloud and to share magical moments of emotional exchange. They are books full of details, which immerse us in the careful observation of the images and recreate the beauty, the sense of humour and the poetics of the text. In our list you can find several of them, but the cornerstone of this section would be You and I by Elisenda Roca and Guriri --the bestseller, which has already become a Combel classic.

When our little ones start to fly, they need longer and more complex stories to read on their own. That is the purpose of the early chapter books. Martí-Salomó are now working on the first titles of “Ticniks” and the “Daniel Detective” trilogy by Marta Jarque to be published in September, will shelter these early readers.

The corridor that leads directly to the enjoyment of autonomous reading leads the youngest to somewhere between classic narrative and graphic novels, with characters of greater depth and adventure and mystery plots in a context of extraordinary everyday life. Our bestselling series “Bitmax & Co” and “Agus & Monsters,” by Jaume Copons and Liliانا Fortuny, and “Mía Fantasía”, by Elisenda Roca and Betowers, would happily fill this spot.

We also need non-fiction books in our library that, in an entertaining way, open the doors to thematic knowledge, especially attractive to some of our young readers.

Following Inside the Museum Mazes, we are launching a magnificent lift-the-flap book: Hands on Work! by Luisa Vera -- a playful journey through the history of architecture, within reach of the first curious. Meanwhile Cristina Junyent and Cristina Losantos are mixing the mortar to build Daily Life, Then & Now: a new title to understand where we have come from, where we are, and to get a glimpse of where we are going.

Speaking of the past, we will go back in time to prehistoric times with Earthlings by Patricia Geis. And to reflect on our future, our EcoSphere imprint will grow with two new titles: Harvest Time by Marta Vilar and The Leap of the Frog by Teresa Franquesa. Books to learn how to build sustainable habits, to understand how climate change is affecting us and take action on global warming.

Finally, an indispensable genre in any youth library: comics, stories in which image and text have equal weight and pave the way for reading practice. Besides the Volume 3 of Massagran adventures, Combel is delighted to contribute with a very special monograph: The Marvelous, Unique and Surprising Book of St. George, by Jaume Copons and Liliانا Fortuny. An amusing adventure about the legend of Saint George.

That was the end of that! We have created a good library, in which each one of its shelves will allow the children a playful learning process that, just like a toy box, will make them the protagonists of the wonderful world of books.

Wow! What a Hole!

Toddlers will have a great time playing with the concentric die-cut holes in the new rhyming board book by Mar Benegas.

Help the little ants to find their home, from hole to hole, until they reach the anthill.

Each die simulates a different type of hole we find in nature –from the largest to the smallest: a lunar crater, a cave, a volcanic crater and an owl's nest.

Little ones won't be able to resist the tactile concentric holes on every page!

Earthlings: Prehistory

Six million years ago the Earth was shaken by a sudden climate change. The lush forests of Africa became savannahs. Primates, who until then lived in the trees, learned to live on the ground and to walk on two legs in order to be able to stand in the undergrowth and see into the distance. They learned to think, to invent, to communicate, to imagine; they became human. Equipped with stone tools and mastering the fire, they set out to travel the world.

Discover the great adventure of humans in prehistoric times!

In this beautifully illustrated novelty book by Patricia Geis, you can journey through the history of humankind: How did we live, what did we eat, how did we organize ourselves? How did we get here?

From Homo habilis to Homo sapiens.

Hands on Work!

Get ready to travel in a very special time machine, together with siblings Diego and Aida. Together, we will go back to prehistoric times and, from there, we will return chronologically from the first great civilisations of Ancient Egypt and China, through the classical period, the Middle Ages, the Renaissance, the Baroque and Modernity to the present day.

To make the journey even more pleasurable, the reader will find pastimes related to each era between destinations: from interpreting hieroglyphics, to matching games, incredible mazes, and "seek and find".

To learn more about an architectural period, just lift the flap to find out information about the styles, iconic buildings, constructions and famous architects.

Ticniks

A new series by the Martí-Salomó tandem to live a thousand adventures in 24 hours. Playing with a plushie can lead to total chaos!

Grandma Henrietta discovers a box full of staffies in a junk shop, the ideal gift for her granddaughter Cristina Ruina! It's a pity they are not for sale because they are very, very special. They are Ticniks. So after much insistence, the owner agrees to sell her one every half a year.

Each Ticnik has its own instructions, as do Gremlins and Tamagotchis. To activate it, you must hug it and recite a specific formula. In addition, each one has 3 rules, which must be strictly adhered to or chaos will ensue. Whatever happens, after 24 hours, everything will return to normal and the Ticnik will return to its inanimate state. What 's next?

Yummy, Yummy!

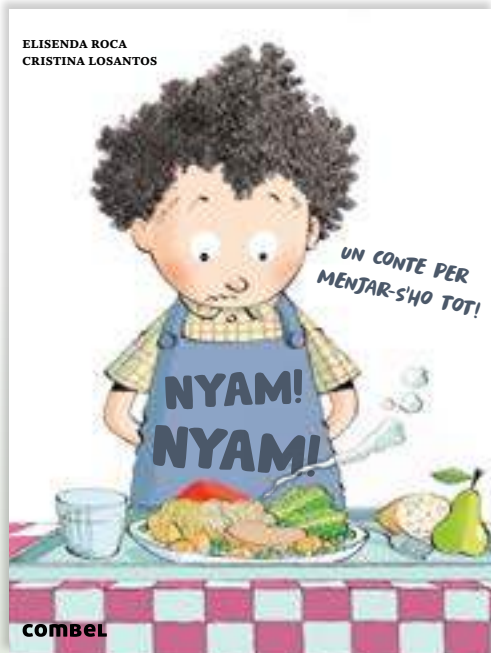

Every parent knows the struggle. Many kids learn early on to use the “I don’t like....” language. So often when a child declares that they don’t like a food, they haven’t even tried it. Or, they tried it once. Usually they’re eyeing up the food and have concerns about the texture or color. They’ve learned that when they say they don’t like food, adults back off. But, this story might be a way to help children actually learn to eat new foods, because the truth is, they may not truly dislike all the foods they claim not to like.

Yummy, yummy! tells Clara’s story. A very cheerful girl loved by her classmates. But there is something that has her worried.....After jumping, dancing and exercising, why is eating such a big sacrifice for her? No, it’s not that. She’s simply not interested in food. And if you put unfamiliar foods in her mouth, she’s horrified!

A Monstrous Deal

Everything is about to change in the world of Agus & Monsters.

Agus and Lidia are graduating and next year they will go to high school. Emma will be the director of the Big Library of Galerna. Dr. Brot has lost the Book of Monsters and asks our friends for help. Believe it or not, for the first time, he and the monsters have to team up because they are all interested in recovering the book. Without it, they will all have to remain in the real world forever.

Throughout the plot, the authors use all possible literary resources to achieve an authentic coming-of-age graphic novel. What better way to face a new stage than with books, humour and music?

The Adventures of Massagran

In 1910, Folch i Torres created Massagran, one of the most singular characters remembered by all. This bold and daring guy is never afraid to leave the mainland to set sail on the high seas. A lover of travel and the unknown, who overcomes all kinds of situations, even the most unlikely, with wit and a sense of humour, with quips that make readers laugh.

Based on the original adventure novels, Massagran gave rise to a collection of comics, written by the author's son, Ramon Folch i Camarasa, and illustrated by Josep Maria Madorell, based in turn on Junceda's illustrations. The comics were serialised in the children's magazine Cavall Fort and, some time later, published in book format by Editorial Casals.

Quisicosas

Quisicosas takes a fresh look at everyday objects. Playing with the shapes of a potty and a pencil, each book allows young children to explore, use their perception skills and make sense of the world around them. While guessing which are the possible uses of such ordinary objects, the books work on vocabulary, creativity, teamwork and empathy. Thus a potty is transformed into a cooking plate, a hat or a sailing boat. A pencil becomes a flower and space rocket or containers for precious things. In the end, the little seekers will find out which is their most common use!

Habits

Sometimes getting dressed, tying the shoes, acquiring table manners, sharing toys or taking turns in the park playground can be tricky for young children. But thanks to the new concertina series by Martí and Salomó, the little ones will develop good habits in a fun and positive way. One side of the book shows good results from daily routines. The other side is a humorous view of the not-so-good results, both aimed at encouraging children to improve their habits at their own pace.

Because there are always two sides of a story and there is always room for improvement, books can be read as long zigzags, displayed on a desk or hung as a garlands to decorate their rooms.

My Hat

A hat is an accessory to cover and protect our heads. But it can also be a useful tool for thinking, playing and guessing what's under it. That's one of the purposes of the new lift-the-flap book by Christian Inaraja. It presents a gallery of portraits of kids wearing all sorts of headwear: from knitted and bath caps to scout and top hats. Accompanied with simple rhymes, readers will discover what the protagonists want to become when they grow up. Just make your guess, lift the flaps and find out which are the thoughts kept under each hat. And you, what do you want to be when you grow up?

I am as Hungry as a Dragon!

With the structure of a chained story telling, this lift-the-flap book with pop-ups plays with the saying that the big fish always eat small fish.

Using simple rhyme, Marta Benegas combines fun riddles with paper engineering and the amazing illustrations of Anna Süßbauer. It starts with a frog who eats one mosquito from Quito and keeps telling a daring hyperbolic story of the animal food chain spread by spread. At the end, a huge dragon swallows them all, turns the book into coal until the tale... is done!

Keep your Eye on the Bad Wolf!

"Where is the Bad Wolf?" is the leitmotif of this picture book written by Juan Arjona. A story about fairy tales, packed with intertextuality, that will make you laugh and will keep you up all night! From the very first line, we know that the Bad Wolf disappears in the middle of the story. He vanishes without a trace on page 6. From then on, readers will see The Little Red Riding Hood, the 7 Kids, the Lying Shepherd... but still no sign of the Bad Wolf. Any idea where he might be?

Cris the Cricket

An enchanting sound button book written by Oriol Garcia Molsosa with the adorable characters from Gusti. Cris the Cricket wishes to be a composer but has run out of inspiration. He always sings the same song: a boring and repetitive cric-cric. One day he decides to plant his cric-cric as a seed. In order to make it grow, he asks the animals that pass by for help. Marlow the Sparrow and many others help him to water the seed. And, little by little, spread by spread, the seed becomes a song... Press the buttons to hear the different animal sounds specially set to music on each page and sing along as the music plays in a joint finale.

What Do We Feed

The planet is in peril, and we cannot restore it without transforming our food system. According to World Wide Fund for Nature, what we eat has changed the planet. Across the globe forests have been devastated to make space to rear cattle and to grow crops to feed livestock, while our oceans become barren as they are trawled and overfished. Food production is not only the greatest driver of wildlife loss, it contributes to climate change: about a quarter of global greenhouse gas emissions are associated with food. What We Feed explains to children how we can all make little changes to our diet to help us eat healthily and sustainably, in a way which is good both for both us and for the environment.

Bad Name

-Once upon a time there was a very ferocious bad wolf...

-Hey, wait a minute, wait a minute.

And so begins this book... Two girls chatting and challenging the myth of the Bad Wolf, put off by folklore and fairy tales.

There are many animals that have a bad name. And the purpose of Bel Olid is to clear their names with facts and figures. Throughout the conversation, the reader will be able to lift the flaps and find out the truth behind wolves, sharks, spiders, horses and crocodiles. Accompanied by the amazing illustrations of Naida Mazzenga, children realize to which extent the image we have of them is misleading and why they are so important to us and to their habitats. Don't be afraid of lifting the flaps. They are not as bad as they say

What an Artist!

The new title in the “What an Artist!” collection invites young readers to take an interactive journey through the work of architect Frank Lloyd Wright through pop-ups, lift-up flaps, windows and many more surprises.

This book traces Wright’s career from his origins, the history of his family, his childhood and the influence of Froebel’s games, to his most iconic designs such as the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum or Fallingwater. This is a tour that explains the basics behind all his work: the importance of landscape, materials and the unity of each building with nature and the space they inhabit.

Little, Little Ones

Àngels Navarro is back with a new series for preschoolers.

The development of intelligence is a permanent and essential task of education, and early childhood is the most effective time to do it.

All the activities are grouped into four blocks marked with pictograms: Colouring and drawing, pasting stickers, thinking games and tearing and pasting paper. A brilliant way to open up kids' eyes and minds about the many ways to be creative.

Ready to learn? Neuroeducation is at stake!

Are you ready to learn? Àngels Navarro, one of the most versatile and comprehensive specialists in games of wit and mind training in Spain, has created a series to foster children's brain skills.

Based on neuroeducation's ultimate literature, children will be able to improve learning processes, consolidate concepts and learn to learn by combining playful exercises with the acquisition of new mental skills.

Every activity is accompanied by the bold illustrations of María Reyes Guijarro, and works on one specific mental skill: attention, reasoning, knowledge of space, language, memory, numerical reasoning, graphomotricity and creative thinking.

All I Know About the Fear

Seeing the world through the eyes of a child can be fun. But sometimes can be scary, too. This boy is scared of getting lost, of being alone in the forest, of fantastic creatures, but the most terrifying is his fear of the dark. Not only to darkness itself; but also the imagined dangers concealed by darkness... He is not alone. His dad is afraid of bank's letters, his mom of horror movies, his pet of a scary cat.

The Amazing Creepy Granny House

Meritxell Martí and Xavier Salomó have created a not-too-spooky lift-the-flap book that promises hours of entertainment for the little ones.

This title shares the memorable story of a grandson visiting her granny to spend a very special evening together. To his surprise, when the kid arrives in the old Victorian style house, there is note for him: a mouth-watering snack awaits in the kitchen.

After having a delicious eye-popping chocolate smoothy, the young boy chases the kitten room by room until dusk. By the time the full-moon is coming, the big date approaches and so does the a punchy dénouement that gives a unique twist on the haunted house cliché.

Readers will love exploring the rooms, guessing what is beneath each flap and finding details and surprises hidden on every page.

Have a ghoulishly fun time!

The Amazing Creepy Grandpa House

Further to the success of The Amazing Creepy Granny House, here comes another amazing lift the flap book by Meritxell Martí and Xavier Salomó.

Once upon a time there was a retired pirate who lived in a strange old house on top of a rock. On the ground floor: an empty tavern. And in the basement, barrels of old rum and secret creepy passages. With the help of his granddaughter, they will sail against all odds to find a precious treasure.

In broad outline, that would be the plot. But don't be misled, this is much more than a book. It is a treasure hunt. It is also a pirate ship to live amazing adventures.

The story is packed with nods to classics such as Treasure Island, The Adventures of Baron Munchausen, Andersen's The Little Mermaid, Salgari's The Black Corsair and many more. If your little ones love adventure and pirate stories, this is one of a kind!

The First Christmas

The aim of this book is to offer families a new and special way to celebrate Jesus's birth.

The First Christmas retells the origin of the first Christmas, the true inspiration for so many cultures and traditions. The engaging text, accompanied by the amazing illustrations by Cristina Losantos, is an introduction to the Nativity story that sticks to the Gospels of Matthew and Luke in the New Testament. It is perfect to read aloud during the festive season and beyond.

To bring the history closer to today's children, at the end of the book you will find further information about the different ways we celebrate Christmas and the traditions worldwide inspired by the Nativity.

Toribio & García

Can an elephant who is afraid of mice ever become best friends with a tiny little mouse? Toribio & García break the myth and present the story of an unlikely friendship between a gentle and observant elephant, Toribio, and an adventurous mouse named García. It just so happens that García met Toribio one day. Since then, they have been inseparable and go together everywhere. And although they see the world in a different way, they enjoy each other's company and have fun learning from each other. In one single book you will find three stories: Good Friends, Toribio' Small Eyes and The Costume Contest. Which is your favorite?

As They Are, So Are They!

We are often dazzled by what other people are like and the things they have or what they do (their hairstyle, glasses, clothes, skills...) and we think we would like to be like them. As They Are, So Are They! makes it clear that this could happen to all of us, that it is neither good or bad and that, in fact, other people also like the things we do, what we have, the way we are... Written by the bestseller author Jaume Copons and illustrated by Gusti, the characters in this story shine a light on children's insecurities and jealousies, making us think about them. Because in the end, we are who we are, right?

The Witches of Ariete

There were seven witches of Ariete until a mysterious egg was found. What would be inside? A terrible spell or the stinkiest of monsters? None of the seven could imagine what had come to the Ariete forest. Sometimes, we might end up liking what we don't like. Ask the Unicorn!

Disconcerting Stories

In this new book by Oriol Garcia Molsosa, young readers will find five stories based on well-known anecdotes about Purcell, Verdi, JS Bach, Scarlatti and Benny Goodman. There is something for everyone: animals, jazz, desserts, great composers and even kings are involved. And all the anecdotes have something in common: they all are true. But the truth is that every single story also hides a little rotten lie.

Disconcerting Stories is an invitation to pay attention, find the discordant and play "truth or lie" with the funny characters created by Mercè Galí to represent them.
